Are you decent with a hammer or know how to read IKEA assembly directions? Please help us help some of our neighborhood teachers assemble desks, mount backpack hooks, and fix broken handles

Principal Withers

Principal For a Day

College & Career Readiness | 10/03/2017

Yesterday was a hard day. When tragedy strikes, I always want to find my kids and hold them close. But yesterday, I was slated to participate in Principal for a Day, organized by the City of Phoenix as part of their Phoenix Achieves program (@PHXAchieves).

My assignment was Campo Bello Elementary School. I wasn't sure what to expect. Would the kids be worried? Would the staff be on alert? Would this be a productive day for anyone?

What I found was healing. What I found was hope. Campo Bello is a K-6 school in a low-income area of the Paradise Valley School District. It has about 74% Hispanic students, and 82% on Free and Reduced Price Lunch. And it has a lot of heart.

On a day like yesterday, that heart shone.

The two elements together – deep compassion and community engagement, coupled with intense focus on data and academics – are often seen as too hard for a school to do at the same time. What I experienced yesterday, and what their data shows, is that it is possible.

And that's what gives me hope.

As I think about how as a country and as individuals we can do better and be better, my experience yesterday had a healing effect. We already are better.

"The PFAD program is a wonderful way to connect schools and businesses in meaningful ways. All of our Phoenix schools in the Pendergast School District participate and report mutually beneficial, long-term relationships as a result," said Dr. Lily Matos DeBlieux, Pendergast Superintendent and city of Phoenix Youth and Education Commissioner.

"Last year was our first year participating in PFAD and it was an eye-opening experience about how beneficial it is for the local community and schools to collaborate to improve the educational experience for students," said Michelle Lee, owner, ATA Martial Arts.
